PELMANISM - PEXESO

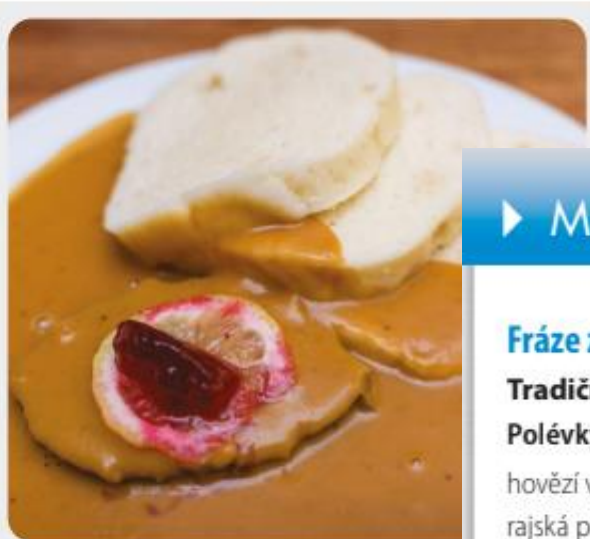

► MATURITNÍ TÉMATA

The pride of Czech cuisine is Beef Sirloin in Cream Sauce (Svíčková na smetaně), a common Sunday family dish. The sirloin is marinated and then roasted with root vegetables, mainly carrots, celeriac, parsley root and onions. The vegetables and the meat juice are then blended and made into a sauce by adding cream and flour. The sliced meat is served with this sauce, bread dumplings, whipped cream, a slice of lemon and cranberry sauce.

Another typical, easy-to-find Czech dish is Goulash. Large pieces of beef are slowly cooked with onion, garlic, tomato puree and spiced with paprika to make a thick meaty sauce. This Goulash stew is served with bread dumplings or sourdough bread. Sometimes game is used instead of beef.

A perfect example of traditional Czech food is Schnitzel. A piece of tenderised meat, which is usually po chicken, more rarely veal, is coated with flour, beaten eggs and breadcrumbs, and fried. Schnitzel is usually served with boiled potatoes or potato salad. The traditional Czech version of the latter is a mixture of potatoes, onions, hard-boiled eggs and pickled gherkins, flavoured with mayonnaise and mustard. Fried cheese, locally as "smažák", is a classic Czech vegetarian dish. A slice of breaded Eidam or other hard cheese is deep-fried and served with French fries and tartar sauce.
